

"Tell us another story, Agatha!" Agatha smiled at the children gathered around her, seated on rocks warmed by the summer sun and eating her specialty sunmaw fruit ice cream.

"Alright, alright, settle down" Agatha laughed, relishing in their enthusiasm and a cool breeze. "This is an enchanting tale, one that I do not speak of often, so listen carefully."

"Our journey started on a blazing day when the sun was scorching us through to our bones. Kitri, our bard, had a 'solution' to this problem—a distraction, or quest away from the burning sun" Agatha sighed, closing her eyes and rubbing her temple. "It, unfortunately, proved to be quite the challenge."

"After weeks of travel and smelling like rotting fish, we entered the eerie waters of the island Ichitara. Raving bunyips and starving eels circled the isle, waiting to claim their next victim" Agatha eyed the audience cautiously. "There is rumor of an enchanted lake on Ichitara, shrouded in mystery and visible only through a true bard's song. It is known as the Lake of Aberration—with magick so powerful it makes the wildlife rabid. The Lake will turn any who are unsuccessful with their song mad, as their mind slowly deteriorates" shocked murmurs chimed in the crowd.

Chuckling, Agatha continued, "It is not all that bad. For, if you are successful and make it to the Lake, your very magick will be enhanced ten fold. It is said that the Lake of Aberration was blessed by the stars and is a shortcut to the songs of the multiverse."

"Is that why it will only reveal itself to a bard's song?" Asked a shy halfling. Agatha smiled, "Bards are gifted in a way that I cannot begin to describe" after a short pause Agatha continued. "Within ten minutes of setting foot on the isle, we heard a scream echo from the rear of our group. I whipped around to find Eilrel jumping up and down yelling 'Get it off, get it off!' with a rabid rabbit attached to her leg!" The crowd laughed. "As only the magick of a bard works on the Ichitaran wildlife, the rabbit would not release its jaws until Kitri cast animal friendship."

Agatha sighed, "While we continued on the path, we became increasingly hungry. For nearly the tenth time that day, I had to smack a poisonous fruit out of Aseir's mouth. An opaw can be easily mistaken for its deadly cousin, the dream opaw—one bite will send anyone into an endless sleep" Agatha eyed the audience cautiously.

"Suddenly, a froghemoth came crashing out of the foliage with an incoherent goblinoid on its back!" The crowd gasped. "The goblinoid, gone mad from the Lake was yelling: 'Whipping waves of golden showers—this conjubilant flibbertigibbet is glunty on the morrow! My species of friend Froghilly goes on and on until, are numbers become vegetable?'" The audience laughed as Agatha made grand gestures imitating the creature. "The beast let out a mighty croak and snapped its tongue right at Aesir! Aesir ducked into the foliage just in time—the froghemoth's tongue slammed into the ground where he had been, splattering us with dirt and mud!"

"The goblinoid kept speaking gibberish as the froghemoth snarled and lurched one of its tentacles towards Eilrel. At a loss of what to do, Kitri cast Otto's irresistible dance and the froghemoth, reared on its hind legs, danced away with the goblinoid!" Chuckles turned to laughter as the crowd lost their composure at the thought of a dancing frog beast.

"All of a sudden, Kitri turned towards where the goblinoid appeared, took in a deep breath, and began her bard song."

With silver streaks of gossamer,
A river threatens to pull under,
The energy spiraling within me,
At last it has been set free.

"The mirage of fruit trees dissipated, revealing a lake of starlight."
